This is not an effective consultation. I can see where the current boundaries are and I can see what the forecast electorate is but there is nothing to explain how the forecast electorate has been calculated. I'm not clear if the current wards are maintained, where the new boundaries come from. Surely it would be helpful to identify where any overall ward reductions are happening and then give people an opportunity to use an interactive map upon which new boundaries could be drawn. This redrawing of boundaries should be something that people in the council who have demographic data for wards to hand, could complete. There would then be something to comment on. Are you really expecting the public to understand where there is electoral imbalance and how a boundary alteration could bring more balance?
