Comment text:

This is fine. At least in the denser mostpart of Surrey. The number is unchanged. Few people object to their division's councillor being primarily for another adjoining "community" in Surrey. It is also my settled, considered and researched view that any such objections must not move large numbers of electors and that people should accept more mathematical, that is equally apportioned, divisions as time moves on. The driving factor for this is speed and ease of communication which has radically increased in the last 30 years. Your governing statutes could well use an overhaul sparing you much wasted, ongoing petty debates that have become ever more petty based on the reality mentioned.
