These proposed name changes have caused much confusion and anger to local residents who were and would be happy to see the continued use of compass points to identify areas in Washington, A common question asked is why the boundary commission has chosen to opt for proposals put forward by two parties who have no representation in Washington. While it is appreciated that sometimes boundaries must change the renaming of wards seems a flight of fancy. Washington is full of fantastic villages and compass points allow a more fairer representation rather than cherry picking villages.
