Related subject: Plains Farm estate

Born 1943, I have lived in Plains Farm since 1963. To class it as St Chad's is wrong, it does not belong to the St Chad's parish. The estate has nothing to do with Farringdon and even less to do with Herrington. For most people here, the Sainsbury Silksworth and the lake/park next to it represent the end of the city centre suburbs and the beginning of the old pit villages on the outskirts towards County Durham. The same is true of North Moor Lane which we never go past. This is how people have thought about this area for years. Plains Farm was where we moved to get away from life around the pit. Plains Farm has more in common with Humbledon and Tunstall. Our coffee morning is in Humbledon and Plains Farm Community Centre. We should go back to the previous Tunstall and Humbledon Ward. Silksworth and Farringdon and Lakeside have all got much more in common with each other than we have ever had with any of them. I could not even tell you the name of a single street in Herrington and there are no buses to get me to see a Herrington councillor.
