We live right on the western boundary of the Thirsk council area and, though we do not frequent Thirsk for a vast amount of things these days, we would not be happy to be pushed into either of the two council areas to the West. Most of our needs (groceries, accessing travel, other services (such as GP, dentist, etc) are split between Northallerton (mainly) and Thirsk. In fact, I also went to school in both Carlton Miniott and Thirsk. We live along the eastern side of the River Swale, which feels like a natural boundary.
